A Report To The Globe and Mail and CTV

Impact of the Release of the Gomery Report

November 4, 2005

Introduction and Methodology

- ◆ Gregg, Kelly, Sullivan & Woolstencroft: The Strategic Counsel is pleased to present findings of The Globe and Mail/CTV November Polling Program.
- ◆ The findings are based on interviews conducted by telephone among a weighted national sample of 1000 adult Canadians 18 years of age or older.
- ◆ The interviews were conducted between November 2nd and November 3rd, 2005.
- ◆ A sample of 1,000 yields a margin of error of +/- 3.1 percentage points, 19 times out of 20.
- ◆ Note: Due to rounding, proportions may not total 100%.

Key Conclusions – Impact of the Release of the Gomery Report

- ◆ (At least for the moment), the “Gomery Effect” has once again changed the political landscape in Canada. Only a few days following its issuance, almost 70% of Canadians have heard at least “a fair amount”, if not “a great deal”, about the Report. Consequently, sponsorship and scandal (16%) is, once again, second only to health care (24%) as the most important issue heading into the next election.
- ◆ While a small majority (52%) claimed that the Report was about “as (they) expected”, twice as many claim the results were “worse” (28%) rather than “better” (13%) than they expected. In the province of Quebec, the report had even a greater and more polarizing impact, with 6 in 10 claiming they had heard a “great deal” and more voters than in the ROC likely to say its findings were both “worse” and “better” than they expected. The end result is that this “effect”, once again, has been sufficient to cause Liberal support to slide and Opposition support to climb.
- ◆ Within the margins of error, the Conservatives (31%) and the Liberals (28%) are now tied. While Liberal support has eroded in all regions, each of the three opposition parties have picked up enough votes among key constituencies that they may be enticed to bring the government down soon.
- ◆ The Conservatives now dominate the Prairies (57%) and more importantly have picked up support in Ontario (35%) (where they are now virtually tied with the Liberals) and in larger towns. While they are still running third in 1 million plus population centers, this more urban/Ontario skew to their vote would undoubtedly improve their seat standing.

Key Conclusions – Impact of the Release of the Gomery Report

- ◆ The NDP has closed the gender gap (among men) that was evident in our last poll and now lead in the competitive province of B.C. They have also recovered ground in the major metropolitan centers and Atlantic and Western Canada. (As we will see, they may be the biggest, albeit unwitting, beneficiary of the scandal issue).
- ◆ The BQ now holds almost 60% of the popular vote in Quebec, virtually guaranteeing victory in all francophone seats.
- ◆ The lesson for the Opposition parties should now be clear – when this issue is in the forefront of voter's minds, they win; when it recedes, voters (especially in Ontario) tend to shift back to their more comfortable alliance with the Liberals. The question for them therefore becomes do they believe they can sustain this issue into the future; for as we have seen in the past, these concerns tend to dissipate as time passes.
- ◆ The heart of the Liberals' problem is that the population simply does not believe Gomery's major conclusions. Sixty percent do not believe that Martin was not involved and an even larger number (71%) feel he must be held accountable. In fact, these views are held in every region and across every category analyzed including age, income, gender, and community size. Only current Liberal voters believe he was not involved and should not be held accountable for the events that transpired, but even among these loyalists almost 4 in 10 disagree.

Key Conclusions – Impact of the Release of the Gomery Report

- ◆ Not only do voters have misgivings about Martin’s past involvement, they also seem unprepared to extend the benefit of the doubt to him now. In fact, rather than believing his recent actions demonstrate that he has accepted responsibility for fixing these problems, twice as many see his actions as “a desperate attempt to cling to power” (62%). This view prevails in every region of the country but is particularly pronounced in the Prairies (72%).
- ◆ While only a minority are willing to exonerate Martin, voters seem to be somewhat more forgiving to the Liberal Party. A slight majority (58%) believe that the wrong doing was carried out by only “a few individuals” – a view that is found in equal measure in Quebec (62%).
- ◆ The small ray of hope for the Liberals in this poll is that Canadians still do not have much of an appetite for an election. Almost two-thirds (63%) still find Martin’s offer to call an election after Gomery’s final report more appealing than an immediate election call. In fact, only BQ voters appear ready for a campaign now.
- ◆ The question of election timing may be a “phony issue” however. A solid majority (65%) claim their likelihood of voting Conservative would not be affected if they chose to join the other opposition parties and defeat the government. While slightly more (19%) say they would be “less likely” rather than “more likely” (13%) to vote Conservative, this may not be a sufficient deterrent, given the larger gains they have made as a result of this issue.

Key Conclusions – Impact of the Release of the Gomery Report

- ◆ Cynicism towards politics may also be working in the Liberals' favour. While there is no question that the scandal issue has hurt their fortunes, the prevailing view is that no one else would be particularly better at cleaning up this situation. In fact, almost a third of voters either have no view or believe "none" of the parties are capable of bringing about this difference. That said, the NDP have more credibility and are more competitive on this question than any other one tested.
